Explain why teamwork can be superior to individual work. ANS: Teams can usually accomplish more work than individuals can. Synergy occurs when the team's output exceeds the total of the individuals' efforts. Furthermore, teams are more creative, have more information available to them, and may offer more pleasant interpersonal communication dynamics. ANS: Conflict emerges because people have differing ideas, but it can be a positive attribute of groups. The diverse ideas can help team members identify the best solutions and suggestions. However, personality conflicts can destroy the effectiveness of groups. Conformity is needed for agreement on fundamental issues, such as how a group functions. When too much conformity exists, however, new, creative ideas are not expressed and the result may be a lack of innovative solutions and approaches. Pressure to conform is negative because only one viewpoint is aired. Consensus occurs when groups reach a decision that best reflects the thinking of all group members.

103. Why is "small talk" important when a group is first forming?

ANS:

People need to be able to trust the members of their team. When team members don't know each other, trust does not exist. By sharing personal information about their families, friends, hobbies, and so on, members become better able to build relationships and foster an open environment in which everyone is comfortable.

104. What are three guidelines for giving feedback in teams?

ANS:

Students are to list three of these guidelines:

- a. Be descriptive. Discussing information objectively and providing examples help members give constructive feedback.
- b. Avoid using labels. Behavioral labels can create tension among members. Instead, feedback should focus on actual behaviors.
- c. Don't exaggerate. Stating the truth is more tactful than stretching the truth and causing hurt feelings.
- d. Speak for yourself. Don't refer to absent members of the group who may or may not agree with your feedback.
- e. Use "I" statements. These statements reflect your point of view, rather than pointing blame at the receiver of your feedback.

106. What are some ways to minimize and solve group problems?

Group problems can be minimized or effectively handled when team members have gotten to know one another, established ground rules, and discussed behavioral norms. To overcome problems, team members should not blindly accept them, overreact to them, or underreact to them. Teams should not scapegoat any member, because one person rarely is solely responsible for the success or failure of the group. Groups should consider how to help people contribute more to collaborative efforts. Members should welcome all contributions respectfully, regardless of whether they agree with what is said. Making a light comment, laughing, complimenting someone, or recalling previous situations may ease the tension of a situation.

107. What are the five strategies that writing teams should follow?

ANS:

- a. Assign tasks and develop a schedule. One of the first steps is to identify the project's goals and the reader. Then develop a schedule for each component of the project—research, distribution of tasks, and so on.
- b. Meet regularly. It is important to hold regular meetings to discuss ideas, track developments, review progress, and reevaluate the workload and task distribution.
- c. Draft the document. Different members can write different parts of the document that relate to their fields of expertise, or one person may be in charge of drafting the entire document from information provided by group members.
- d. Provide helpful feedback on team writing. Members should review each other's work. In addition to improving the document, this review helps each contributor become a better writer.
- e. Revise the draft. Each member should receive a copy of the draft to review, and then the team should meet to review for errors, gaps, repetition, and writing style.

Ethical standards dictate that team members put the good of the team ahead of their own personal agendas. Team members also have an ethical obligation to respect the integrity and emotional needs of other group members. Finally, each member has an ethical responsibility to contribute his or her best effort to the team's mission by engaging in appropriate behavior and refraining from counterproductive actions.

Individualism is a cultural trait in which the people of the culture see themselves first as individuals and believe that their own interests take priority over those of the families, groups or societies to which they belong. These countries place high value on individualism: the United States, Canada, Great Britain, Australia, and the Netherlands. These countries place low value on individualism: Japan, Taiwan, Mexico, Greece, and China.

ANS:

Competent communicators prepare themselves by learning as much about the other culture as possible. They learn about that culture's customs, gift exchanges, viewpoints on time and space, and so on. In addition, competent communicators recognize the individual within the culture and understand that that individual has his or her own needs, perceptions, and experiences. The competent communicator adapts as needed to work effectively with other people.

113. List and describe the four strategies for communicating with people from different cultures.

- a. Maintain formality. Unlike American and Canadian cultures, most cultures value and respect formality in business arrangements and negotiations. People of such cultures expect others to use courtesy titles and surnames. Your verbal and nonverbal communication must convey an attitude of correctness and etiquette.
- b. Show respect. Do not judge the customs and beliefs of people from other cultures. These customs and beliefs are probably based on experience and sound reasoning. Instead,

- demonstrate a sincere understanding of what the other person is feeling by listening and observing carefully.
- c. Communicate clearly. Jargon, slang, and humor should definitely be avoided. Support your ideas by using concrete facts and specific illustrations. Provide encouraging feedback to ensure that people understand what you are saying. You can achieve this by frequently summarizing your points and paraphrasing what others tell you. Also, using a variety of media helps illustrate your points.
- d. Value diversity. Recognize that diversity can produce a rich environment of ideas and strengthen the organization. Sharing ideas helps people bond together and understand each other.

- b. The ways in which men and women communicate differ. Women tend to be more complimentary and sensitive to others' needs than men are. Learning the typical patterns of gender communication helps a person understand and communicate better with both genders.
- c. People with disabilities are a vital part of the work force. Competent communicators recognize different disabilities and adapt accordingly. Additional sources of cultural diversity might include regional differences, class differences, or generational differences.

Because they keep documents in one central space, wikis allow team members to collaborate at a distance and contribute as the document develops. This participation means that team members may shape a final project without waiting to produce a "final" draft that is then handed over for feedback. The evolution of knowledge is easier to track, and everyone follows the progress online. Wikis can enhance team communication and incorporate links, video, message boards, and other web features. Using wikis may result in fewer meetings, less email—and most importantly, better work outcomes.

117. Explain the difference between intercultural communication, multiculturalism, and inclusion.

ANS:

- a. Intercultural communication takes place between people from different cultures when a message is created by someone from one culture to be understood by someone from another cultural. (Because there are cultural differences in any mix of people in a U.S. company, it could be argued that most workplace messages are intercultural in some sense. But most often the term refers to communication across national borders).
- b. Multiculturalism is a philosophy of appreciating diversity among people, typically beyond differences in countries of origin.
- c. Inclusion is putting the idea of multiculturalism into practice: creating policies and actions that help all employees, whatever their backgrounds, feel included, able to contribute, and able to reach their full potential.

- b. Identifying people by age, gender, or ethnicity, when such information is not relevant to the situation.
- c. Using terms that could be viewed as dismissive (e.g. "girls," "youngsters," "old-timers,") when such terms are not relevant to the situation.

ANS:

Most team problems will not disappear on their own; some, however, can safely be ignored. Consider whether the issue is a minor irritation or something that disrupts team functioning. Judge the problem in the light of the team goals. The purpose of the group is not to develop life-long friendships or solve personal problems, so avoid getting sidetracked on personal issues if they don't impact the group directly. Tolerate personality differences, and accept that disagreements are a normal part of team functioning. On the other hand, if group interactions lead to loss of respect or become characterized by personal attacks (rather than disagreements over issues), it is time to address the conflict openly and directly.

Teamwork requires that participants balance their own needs with the larger responsibility to the team. Promoting the well-being of the team means refraining from destructive gossip, dominating meetings, sabotaging work, or belittling the contributions of others. Being part of a team lets you commiserate with (and encourage) team members when goals are not met, but also celebrate the success of every member who contributes to the team goals.
