SHORT ANSWER

1. Explain protected characteristics.

ANS:

Under federal, state, and local laws employers are prohibited from considering the following factors in making hiring and other employment decisions: age, color, disability, genetic information, marital status (some states), military status or experience, national origin, pregnancy, race, religion, sexual orientation (some states and cities) These are considered protected characteristics under EEO laws and regulations. All workers are provided equal protection; the laws do not favor some groups over others.

The latest amendments to the Americans with Disabilities Act in 2009, has significantly broadened the definition of disabled individuals. It includes anyone with a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more major life activities without regard for the ameliorative effects of mitigating measures such as medication, prosthetics, hearing aids, and so on. This establishes a very low threshold for establishing whether an individual is "disabled."

ESSAY

1. Describe the concepts of equal employment opportunity.

ANS:

Court decisions and administrative rulings have helped to define several basic EEO concepts. The four key concepts are discussed below:

Business Necessity and Job Relatedness: A business necessity is a practice necessary for safe and efficient organizational operations, such as restricting employees from wearing garments that might get caught in machinery although the attire may be required by an employee's religion.

Bona Fide Occupational Qualification: Employers may discriminate on the basis of sex, religion, or national origin if the characteristic can be justified as a bona fide occupational qualification reasonably necessary to the normal operation of the particular business or enterprise. Thus, a bona fide occupational qualification provides a legitimate reason why an employer can exclude persons on otherwise illegal bases of consideration. The application of a BFOQ is very narrowly determined and an employer seeking to justify hiring on this basis is advised to obtain prior authorization from the EEOC.

Burden of Proof: When a legal issue regarding unlawful discrimination is raised, the burden of proof must be satisfied to file suit against an employer and establish that unlawful discrimination has occurred. The plaintiff charging discrimination must establish a prima facie case of discrimination through either factual or statistical evidence. The prima facie case means that sufficient evidence is provided to the court to support the case and allow the plaintiff to continue with the claim. The burden then shifts to the employer who must provide a legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for the decision. The plaintiff then must show either that the employer's reason was a pretext for discrimination or that there is an alternative selection technique that would not result in discrimination. The plaintiff maintains the final burden of proving that an employment decision was the result of unlawful discrimination.

Nonretaliatory Practices: Employers are prohibited from retaliating against individuals who file discrimination charges. Retaliation occurs when employers take punitive actions against individuals who exercise their legal rights.

2. Elaborate on the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

ANS:

Although the very first civil rights act was passed in 1866, it was not until passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 that the keystone of antidiscrimination employment legislation was put into place. Title VII, the employment section of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, details the legal protections provided to applicants and employees and defines prohibited employment practices. Title VII is the foundation on which all other nondiscrimination legislation rests. Title VII of the Civil Rights Act states that it is illegal for an employer to:

- fail or refuse to hire or discharge any individual, or otherwise discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin, or
- limit, segregate, or classify his employees or applicants for employment in any way that would deprive or tend to deprive any individual of employment opportunities or otherwise adversely affect his status as an employee because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.

Title VII Coverage: Title VII, as amended by the Equal Employment Opportunity Act of 1972, covers most employers in the United States. Any organization meeting one of the following criteria must comply with rules and regulations that specific government agencies have established to administer the act:

- All private employers of 15 or more employees
- All educational institutions, public and private
- State and local governments
- Public and private employment agencies
- Labor unions with 15 or more members
- Joint labor/management committees for apprenticeships and training

3. Describe affirmative action program (AAP). What is its primary objective?

ANS:

An affirmative action program (AAP) outlines proactive steps the organization will take to attract and hire members of underrepresented groups. Federal contractors are required to develop and maintain a written affirmative action program (AAP). This data-driven program includes analysis of the composition of company's current workforce with a comparison to the availability of workers in the labor market. The overall objective of the AAP is to have the company's workforce demographics reflect as closely as possible the demographics in the labor market from which workers are recruited.

4. Discuss two acts that have been passed to control pregnancy discrimination.

ANS:

The Pregnancy Discrimination Act (PDA) of 1978 amended Title VII to require that employers treat maternity leave the same as other personal or medical leaves.

Closely related to the PDA is the Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA) of 1993, which requires that qualified individuals be given up to 12 weeks of unpaid family leave and also requires that those taking family leave be allowed to return to jobs. The FMLA applies to both men and women. Provisions of the Affordable Care Act (2010) allow for break time and a private place for nursing mothers to express breast milk for one year after the birth of a child.

5. What are the clauses stated in the Equal Pay Act of 1963? Why was the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act enacted in 2009?

ANS:

The Equal Pay Act of 1963 requires employers to pay similar wage rates for similar work without regard to gender. A common core of tasks must be similar, but tasks performed only intermittently or infrequently do not make jobs different enough to justify significantly different wages. Differences in pay between men and women in the same jobs are permitted because of:

1. differences in seniority;
2. differences in performance;
3. differences in quality and/or quantity of production; and
4. factors other than sex, such as skill, effort, and working conditions.

In response to a procedural issue in her pursuit of a fair pay claim, Congress enacted the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act in 2009, which eliminates the statute of limitations for employees who file pay discrimination claims under the Equal Pay Act. Each paycheck is essentially considered a new act of discrimination. Lawmakers recognized that because pay information is often secret it might take months or even years for an employee to discover the inequity. The successful plaintiff can recover up to two years of back pay.

6. Describe glass ceiling.

ANS:

Glass ceiling refers to discriminatory practices that have prevented women and other minority status employees from advancing to executive-level jobs. Despite the fact that organizations with greater gender diversity enjoy better financial performance than those with less diversity, women still hold a small percentage of top leadership jobs in corporations. Only 41 of the Fortune 1000 companies are led by a female CEO. In organizations where diversity is seen as strategically important, a higher percentage of C-level executives are women. There are some differences around the world regarding the importance of diversity.

7. Discuss the types of sexual harassment at the workplace.

ANS:

Two basic types of sexual harassment have been defined by EEOC regulations and a number of court cases. They are defined as follows:

1. Quid pro quo is harassment in which employment outcomes are linked to granting sexual favors.
2. Hostile environment harassment exists when an individual's work performance or psychological well-being is unreasonably affected by intimidating or offensive working conditions.

Sexual harassment increasingly occurs via e-mail, social networking sites, and Internet access systems. Cyber sexual harassment may occur when an employee forwards an e-mail joke with sexual content or accesses pornographic websites at work and then shares the content with other employees. Cyber stalking, in which a person continually e-mails an employee requesting dates and sending personal messages, is growing as instant messaging expands. Many employers have policies addressing the inappropriate use of e-mail, company computer systems, and electronic technology usage. Some have equipped their computer systems with scanners that screen for inappropriate words and images. Offending employees receive warnings and/or disciplinary actions associated with "flagged" items. If an employee uses the company's equipment or computer network, the employer might be liable if the situation is not properly addressed.

8. Describe the important laws relating to disability discrimination.

ANS:

Several federal laws have been enacted to advance the employment of disabled individuals and to reduce discrimination based on disability. These laws and regulations affect employment matters as well as public accessibility for individuals with disabilities.

Rehabilitation Act

The earliest law regarding disabled individuals was passed in 1973 and applied only to federal contractors. The Rehabilitation Act defined many of the terms and concepts incorporated into subsequent laws and provided for equal employment opportunity for disabled workers and applicants. The Act went further and required that federal contractors take affirmative action to employ disabled workers. A section of the contractor's AAP is devoted to steps taken to promote the employment of disabled persons.

Americans with Disabilities Act

Two decades after passage of the first law prohibiting discrimination against disabled individuals, the Americans with Disabilities Act was enacted in 1990. This Act applies to private employers, employment agencies, and labor unions with 15 or more employees and is enforced by the EEOC. State government employees are not covered by the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), which means that they cannot sue in federal courts for relief and damages. However, they may still bring suits under state laws in state courts. Many of the concepts and definitions included in the ADA were based on the Rehabilitation Act.

Amendment to the Americans with Disabilities Act

In 2009, Congress passed amendments to the ADA, which overruled several key cases and regulations and reflected the original intent of the ADA. The effect was to significantly broaden the definition of disabled individuals to include anyone with a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more major life activities without regard for the ameliorative effects of mitigating measures such as medication, prosthetics, hearing aids, and so on. This establishes a very low threshold for establishing whether an individual is "disabled."

9. Discuss the important laws relating to age discrimination.

ANS:

Age Discrimination in Employment Act

The Age Discrimination in Employment Act (ADEA) of 1967, amended in 1978 and 1986, prohibits discrimination in terms, conditions, or privileges of employment against all individuals of age 40 or older working for employers having 20 or more workers. However, state employees may not sue state government employers in federal courts because the ADEA is a federal law. Age discrimination charges consistently represent 20% to 25% of all discrimination charges filed with the EEOC. During the last economic downturn employers, fearing lawsuits by older workers, chose instead to lay off younger workers despite their lower salaries. As with most equal employment issues, a better understanding of what constitutes age discrimination continues to be defined by the courts and the EEOC.

Older Workers Benefit Protection Act

This law is an amendment to the ADEA and protects employees when they sign liability waivers for age discrimination in exchange for severance packages during reductions in force. Workers over the age of 40 are entitled to receive complete accurate information on the available benefits, a list of all workers impacted in the reduction, and several weeks to decide whether or not to accept severance benefits in exchange for a waiver to sue the employer. This Act ensures that older workers are not compelled or pressured into waiving their rights under the ADEA. Procedures for laying off older workers require legal oversight and a strict protocol to ensure compliance.

10. Discuss the relevance of the Immigration Reform and Control Acts in the U.S.

ANS:

The United States is home to 40 million foreign-born residents, primarily from Latin America and Asia. This number includes people living in the United States both legally and illegally. Modern-day immigrants are blending in as rapidly as those from previous generations. The influx of immigrants has led to extensive political, social, and employment-related debates. The Immigration Reform and Control Act (IRCA), enacted in 1986, requires employers to verify the employment status of all employees, while not discriminating because of national origin or ethnic background. Employers may not knowingly hire unauthorized aliens for employment in the United States.

Within the first three days of employment, each employee must complete an Employment Eligibility Verification (commonly called an I-9) form and provide documents proving that he or she is legally authorized to work in the United States. The employer is obligated to inspect the documents and maintain records for all new hires.

The E-verify federal database instantly verifies the employment eligibility of employees. Federal contractors are required to use the system as are employers in a number of states where it has been mandated. Other employers may voluntarily use the system to check and verify employees' legal status.

To discourage hiring immigrants rather than U.S. workers, an employer must file documents with the Labor Department and pay prevailing U.S. wages to the visa holders. Despite these regulations, a number of unions and other entities view such programs as ways to circumvent the limits on hiring foreign workers.
