79. Preference for a consultative management style is prevalent in a society with low power distance.

(True; p. 69; Concept; Moderate) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

80. In collectivist cultures based on kinship, security and social needs are met more effectively in the workplace than at home.

(False; p. 70; Concept; Easy)

STUDY QUESTION 9: What cultural factors help to explain risk-taking behavior? How do differences affect business?

81. In societies where trust is high, there tends to be a lower cost of doing business.

(True; p. 71; Concept; Moderate) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

82. Where future orientation is high, people are more willing to delay gratification by investing.

(True; p. 71; Concept; Easy) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

STUDY QUESTION 10: Explain the concepts of low-context versus high-context cultures, monochronic versus polychronic cultures, and idealistic versus pragmatist cultures.

83. A culture in which people prefer to handle tasks sequentially is a polychronic culture.

(False; p. 72; Concept; Easy) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

84. A culture with a preference for a problem-solving style that first settles principles is a pragmatist culture.

(False; p. 73; Concept; Moderate) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

STUDY QUESTION 11: What language problems occur when doing business with another country? What are suggestions for dealing with these problems?

85. When dealing in business with people from another country, it is good to use slang and tell jokes to put everyone at ease.

(False; p. 74; Concept; Moderate) {AACSB: Communication}

86. When a company does business in another country whose official language is the same as the company's home country, employees can assume that although some spellings are different that words will mean the same thing.

(False; p. 74; Concept; Moderate) {AACSB: Communication}

STUDY QUESTION 12: What influences how much adjustment companies and managers must make when operating in different cultures?

87. In spite of cultural differences, people working abroad are often able to do business successfully while still retaining their own cultural habits.

(True; p. 77; Application; Moderate) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

88. A danger in relying on cultural distance to judge the degree of necessary cultural adjustment is that important subtleties might be overlooked.

(True; p. 77; Concept; Moderate) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

STUDY QUESTION 13: What are ethnocentrism, polycentrism, and geocentrism, and what are the problems and/or advantages of each?

89. A potential problem of polycentrism is failure to introduce innovative superiority.

(True; p. 80; Concept; Moderate) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

90. Successful ethnocentric behavior may occur when an MNE sells to outliers in a society whose cultures are similar to those of the MNE's home country.

(True; p. 80; Concept; Moderate) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

STUDY QUESTION 14: What strategies might companies consider for minimizing resistance to changes they introduce in foreign societies?

91. A successful strategy for introducing change into a foreign country is to introduce many changes simultaneously.

(False; p. 84; Concept; Moderate) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

92. To find opinion leaders within an organization abroad, an MNE should look to people in upper levels of the organization.

(False; p. 84; Application; Moderate) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

STUDY QUESTION 15: What are the major scenarios about the future of national cultures? How does cultural imperialism fit into these scenarios?

93. The availability of American hamburgers, Japanese sushi, Italian pizza, and Mexican tacos within a country is evidence that cultural imperialism is taking place.

(False; p. 82; Concept; Moderate) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

94. Increasingly, immigrants are maintaining close contact with their native cultures.

(True; p. 85; Concept; Moderate) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

Essay Questions

STUDY QUESTION 1: Define and explain culture, cultural group membership, and cultural diversity.

95. In a short essay, define culture and discuss cultural differences and the effects on international business.

Culture consists of specific learned norms based on attitudes, values, and beliefs, all of which exist in every nation. Culture cannot easily be isolated from such factors as economic and political conditions. Two potential problems are that (a) companies implement practices that are not fully effective, and (b) employees encounter distress because of foreign behaviors. On the positive side, companies may build a competitive advantage around their cultural diversity.

(p. 53; Concept; Moderate) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

STUDY QUESTION 3: What are the advantages and shortcomings of using the nation as a point of reference for a culture?

96. What are the advantages and shortcomings of using the nation as a point of reference for culture?

The nation provides a workable definition of a culture for international business because basic similarity among people is both a cause and an effect of national boundaries. The laws governing business operations also apply primarily along national lines. Within the bounds of a nation are people who share essential attributes, such as values, language, and race. However, these shared attributes do not mean that everyone in a country is alike, nor do they suggest that each country is unique in all respects.

(p. 56; Application; Moderate) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

STUDY QUESTION 4: What factors influence cultural stability and cultural change?

97. What factors influence cultural stability and cultural change?

Individual and cultural values and customs may evolve over time. Change may come about through choice or imposition. Change by choice may take place as a reaction to social and economic changes that present new alternatives. Change by imposition, sometimes called cultural imperialism, has occurred, for example, when countries introduce legal systems into colonies by prohibiting established practices and defining them as criminal. In addition to national boundaries and geographical obstacles, language is a factor that greatly affects cultural stability. Religion is also a strong shaper of values. (p. 57; Concept; Moderate) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

STUDY QUESTION 6: What are major ways in which societies rank people? What social stratification systems exist? Why is an understanding of social stratification important in international business?

98. In a short essay, describe the various affiliations upon which a person's ranking can be based and discuss how social stratification affects such business functions as marketing and employment practices.

- a. A person's ranking is partly determined by individual factors and partly by the person's affiliation or membership in a given group. Affiliations determined by birth—known as ascribed group memberships—include those based on gender, family, age, caste, and ethnic, racial, or national origin. Affiliations not determined by birth are called acquired group memberships and include those based on religion, political affiliation, and professional and other associations.
- b. Social stratification affects marketing as companies choose to use people in their advertisements that their target market admires or associates. Further, stratification affects employment practices such as hiring, promotion, compensation, and staff-reduction. Employers in different countries are differently influenced by social stratification as they make employment decisions.

STUDY QUESTION 7: Describe the major theories that explain why work motivation may differ from one country to another.

99. Describe the major theories that explain why motivation may differ from one country to another.

- a. Materialism and Leisure: Historically, there is strong evidence that the desire for material wealth is a prime incentive for the work that leads to economic development.
- b. Expectation of Success and Reward: Generally, people have little enthusiasm for efforts that seem too easy or too difficult, where the probability of either success or failure seems almost certain. The greatest enthusiasm for work exists when high uncertainty of success is combined with the likelihood of a very positive reward for success and little or none for failure.

- c. Masculinity-Femininity Index: The average interest in career success varies substantially among countries. In one study, employees with a high masculinity score were those who admired the successful achiever, had little sympathy for the unfortunate, and preferred to be the best rather than be on par with others.
- d. Needs Hierarchy: According to this theory, people try to fulfill lower-order needs sufficiently before moving on to higher ones. People will work to satisfy a need, but once it is fulfilled, it is no longer a motivator.

(p. 67; Concept; Moderate) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

100. In a short essay, list and discuss the various needs in order from lowest to highest.

The most basic needs are physiological, including the needs for food, water, and sex. One needs to satisfy or nearly satisfy a physiological need before a security need becomes a powerful motivator. Then one must satisfy the security need, centering on a safe physical and emotional environment, before triggering the need for affiliation, or social belonging (peer acceptance). After filling the affiliation need, a person may seek an esteem need—the need to bolster one’s self image through receipt of recognition, attention, and appreciation. The highest-order need is that for self-actualization, which means self-fulfillment, or becoming all that is possible for one to become. In very poor countries, a company can motivate workers simply by providing enough compensation for food and shelter. Elsewhere, other needs will motivate workers. Researchers have noted that people from different countries attach different degrees of importance to needs and even rank some of the higher-order needs differently.

(p. 68; Concept; Moderate)

STUDY QUESTION 8: Describe the relationship preferences influenced by power distance and individualism versus collectivism.

101. Discuss the values of power distance, individualism and collectivism in international cultures.

- a. Power distance is a term describing the relationship between superiors and subordinates. Where power distance is high, people prefer little consultation between superiors and subordinates—usually wanting and having an autocratic or paternalistic management style in their organizations.
- b. Attributes of individualism are low dependence on the organization and a desire for personal time, freedom, and challenge. Attributes of collectivism are dependence on the organization and a desire for training, good physical conditions, and benefits. In those countries with high individualism, self-actualization will be a prime motivator because employees want challenges. However, in countries with high collectivism, the provision of a safe physical and emotional environment will be a prime motivator.

(p. 69; Concept; Moderate) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

STUDY QUESTION 9: What cultural factors help to explain risk-taking behavior? How do differences affect business?

102. In a short essay, list and discuss the four aspects of risk-taking behavior as described in the text.

- a. Uncertainty avoidance: Studies show that in countries with the highest score on uncertainty avoidance, employees prefer set rules that are not to be broken even if breaking them is in the company's best interest. Further, these employees plan to work for the company a long time, preferring the certainty of their present positions over the uncertainty of better advancement opportunities elsewhere. In countries characterized by high-risk avoidance, few consumers are prepared to take the social risk of trying a new product first.
- b. Trust: Where trust is high, there tends to be a lower cost of doing business because managers do not have to spend time foreseeing every possible contingency and then monitoring every action for compliance in business relationships. Instead, they can spend time investing and innovating.
- c. Future orientation: In countries with a high future orientation, people are more willing to delay gratification by investing for the future. Delayed compensation is a better motivator in such countries.
- d. Fatalism: If people believe strongly in self-determination, they may be willing to work hard to achieve goals and take responsibility for performance. But a belief in fatalism, that every event is inevitable, may prevent people from accepting this basic cause-effect relationship. Countries with a high degree of fatalism then affect business because people plan less for contingencies.

STUDY QUESTION 10: Explain the concepts of low-context versus high-context cultures, monochronic versus polychronic cultures, and idealistic versus pragmatist cultures.

103. In a short essay, describe low-context and high-context cultures and discuss the difference between the two.

- a. Low-context cultures: Refers to situations in which most people consider relevant only firsthand information that bears directly on the decision they need to make. In business, they spend little time on "small talk."
- b. High-context cultures: Refers to situations in which people consider peripheral information valuable to decision making.
- c. When managers from the two types of cultures deal with each other, the low-context individuals may believe the high-context ones are inefficient and time-wasters. The high-context individuals may believe the low-context ones are too aggressive to be trusted.

(p. 72; Application; Moderate) {AACSB: Communication}

104. In a short essay, contrast monochronic versus polychronic cultures.

Cultures such as those in Northern Europe are called monochronic, preferring to work sequentially, such as finishing with one customer before dealing with another. Conversely, polychronic Southern Europeans are more comfortable working simultaneously with all the tasks they face.

STUDY QUESTION 11: What language problems occur when doing business with another country? What are suggestions for dealing with these problems?

105. In a short essay, discuss the difficulties and the rules used to offset the obstacles in handling translations.

First, some words do not have a direct translation. Second, languages and the common meaning of words are constantly evolving. Third, words mean different things in different contexts. And, finally, grammar is complex, and a slight misuse of vocabulary or word placement may change meanings substantially. Although there is no foolproof way of handling translations, good international business managers use the following rules to handle translations.

- a. Get references on the people who will do translations for you.
- b. Make sure your translator knows the technical vocabulary of your business.
- c. Do a back-translation for written work by having one person go, say, from English to French and a second person translate the French version back into English.
- d. Use simple words whenever possible.
- e. Avoid slang.
- f. When you or your counterpart is dealing in a second language, clarify communications in several ways to assure all parties have the same interpretation.
- g. Realize and budget from the start for the extra time needed for translation and clarification.

106. In a short essay, discuss the elements of a “silent language.”

Colors conjure up meanings that come from cultural experience. For products to succeed, their colors must match the consumers’ frame of reference. Another aspect of silent language is the distance between people during conversations. People’s sense of appropriate distance is learned and differs among societies. Perception of time and punctuality is another unspoken cue that differs by context and may differ across cultures and create confusion. Another silent language barrier concerns a person’s position in a company or society (prestige). Body language, or kinesics (the way in which people walk, touch, and move their bodies), also differs among countries. Few gestures are universal in meaning.

STUDY QUESTION 12: What influences how much adjustment companies and managers must make when operating in different cultures?

107. What influences how much adjustment companies and managers must make in foreign countries?

International companies sometimes have succeeded in introducing new products, technologies, and operating procedures to foreign countries with little adjustment. That's because some of these introductions have not run counter to deep-seated attitudes or because the host society is willing to accept foreign customs as a trade-off for other advantages. Some countries are relatively similar to one another, usually because they share many attributes that help mold their cultures, such as language, religion, geographical location, ethnicity, and level of economic development.

(p. 76; Concept; Moderate) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

108. In a short essay, discuss culture shock and the sequence of events that takes place during this event.

Culture shock is the frustration from experiencing a new culture and having to learn and cope with a vast array of new cultural cues and expectations. People working in a very different culture may pass through stages. First, like tourists, they are elated with "quaint" differences. Later, they may feel depressed and confused—the culture shock phase—and their usefulness in a foreign assignment may be greatly impaired. Fortunately for most people, culture shock begins to ebb after a month or two as optimism grows and satisfaction improves.

STUDY QUESTION 13: What are ethnocentrism, polycentrism, and geocentrism, and what are the problems and/or advantages of each?

109. In a short essay, discuss the three attitudes or orientations that affect how a company and its managers adapt to foreign cultures.

- a. Polycentrism: In polycentric organizations, control is decentralized so that "our manager in Rio" is free to conduct business in what he thinks is "the Brazilian way." In other words, business units in different countries have a significant degree of autonomy from the home office and act like local companies. Polycentrism may be, however, an overly cautious response to cultural variety.
- b. Ethnocentrism: That is, the belief that one's own culture is superior to others. In international business, it describes a company or individual so imbued with the belief that what worked at home should work abroad that it ignores environmental differences.
- c. Geocentrism: Refers to a situation in which a company bases its operations on an informed knowledge of home and host country needs, capabilities, and constraints. This is the preferred approach to business dealing with another culture because it increases introduction of innovations and decreases the likelihood of their failures.

(p. 79; Concept; Moderate) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

110. In a short essay, discuss the three different sets of practices managers may use based on ethnocentrism.

- a. Managers overlook important cultural factors abroad because they have become so accustomed to certain cause-effect relationships in the home country.
- b. Management recognizes the environmental differences but still focuses on achieving home-country rather than foreign or worldwide objectives.
- c. Management recognizes differences but assumes that the introduction of its new products or ways to produce and sell them is both necessary and easy to achieve when it is really a complex process.

(p. 80; Concept; Challenging) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

111. What are the disadvantages of excessive ethnocentrism and excessive polycentrism?

A company that is too polycentric may shy away from certain countries or may avoid transferring home-country practices or resources that may, in fact, work well abroad. Polycentricism may lead to such extensive delegation of decision-making or such extensive imitation of proven host-country practices that the company loses its innovative superiority. Furthermore, the company may lose overall control as managers within each country foster local rather than worldwide objectives.

Excessive ethnocentrism may cause costly business failures if a manager believes his or her own culture is superior to others and is not willing to adapt regardless of the situation.

(p. 79; Application; Moderate) {AACSB: Multicultural and Diversity}

STUDY QUESTION 14: What strategies might companies consider for minimizing resistance to changes they introduce in foreign societies?

112. In a short essay, list and discuss the various approaches international managers seek to understand when instituting change in the international arena.

- a. Value system: It is much easier to adapt to things that do not challenge our value systems than to things that do. When changes do not interfere with deep-seated customs, accommodation is much more likely.
- b. Cost-benefit of change: Some adjustments to foreign cultures are costly to undertake, while others are inexpensive. Some adjustments result in greatly improved performance, such as higher productivity or sales. Other changes may improve performance only marginally. A company must consider the expected cost-benefit relationship of any adjustments it makes abroad.
- c. Resistance to too much change: If resistance is too high, make fewer demands at one time and phase out former policies more slowly.
- d. Participation: One way to avoid problems that could result from change is to discuss a proposed change with stakeholders in advance. By doing so, the company may learn how strong resistance to the change will be, stimulate recognition of the need for improvement among stakeholders, and ease stakeholders' fears of adverse consequences resulting from the change.

- e. Reward sharing: Sometimes a proposed change may have no foreseeable benefit for the people who must support it. A company's solution may be to develop a bonus system for productivity and quality based on using the new approach.
- f. Opinion leaders: By discovering the local channels of influence, an international company may locate opinion leaders who can help speed up the acceptance of change.
- g. Timing: Many good business changes fall flat because they are ill-timed. A culture's attitudes and needs may change slowly or rapidly, so keeping abreast of these changes helps in determining timing.
