25) Why doesn't the cash basis of accounting require adjusting accounts with accruals?

Answer: The cash basis of accounting only records revenues and expenses when cash changes hands, while the accrual basis of accounting recognizes revenues when they are earned and expenses when they are incurred. Adjustments are necessary under the accrual basis of accounting since revenue can be earned even if cash is not received and expenses can be incurred even if cash is not paid.
Diff: 2
Objective: L.O. 2-1
26) Describe the advantages of the accrual basis of accounting and the cash basis of accounting. Answer: The cash basis of accounting has the advantage of producing financial statements when cash is received and paid, giving users a clearer picture of the company's cash position. Proponents suggest that this is important since companies can appear to be doing well based on net income, yet go bankrupt for a lack of cash. The accrual basis of accounting has the advantage of producing a more complete summary of the entity's value-producing activities since it recognizes revenues when they are earned and expenses when they are incurred.

23) Define the following terms:
a. Neutrality
b. Relevance
c. Consistency
d. Verifiability

Answer:
a. Neutrality: free from bias; the information is not slanted to influence behavior in a particular direction
b. Relevance: the capability of information to make a difference to the decision-maker
c. Consistency: using the same accounting policies and procedures from period to period
d. Verifiability: A quality of information such that it can be checked to ensure it is correct
