ESSAY

1. Briefly discuss the issues an organization would want to consider or understand if it were interested in a business venture within China.

ANS:

Chinese managers' business practices have been shaped by the Communist party, socialism, feudalistic values, and guanxi (the practice of building networks for social exchange). In China, the family is regarded as being responsible for a worker's productivity, and in turn, the company is responsible for the worker's family. Chinese managers have very little experience with rewards and punishments, and are reluctant to use them in the workplace. Americans would need to build their own networks, understand the Chinese chain of command, and negotiate slow, general agreements in order to interact effectively.

3. What are some (mention at least five) of the significant workforce composition changes that have been taking place since the second World War?

ANS:

The number of women in the workforce has almost doubled since 1970, increasing from 31.5 million to 64 million. In 2004, women made up almost 60% of labor force. Women are also becoming better prepared to contribute in organizations than ever before with 52% of master degrees, 32% of doctorates, and 50% of all undergraduate degrees being awarded to women. In 2004, 58% of U.S. women were employed. The most rapidly expanding minority segment of the workforce is Hispanic; Asian Americans are also rapidly increasing their workforce numbers. Finally, the workforce is aging for two reasons: the population is aging and people are working longer as there is not mandatory retirement age.

4. Are legal requirements and ethical standards synonymous?

ANS:

They are close but not the same. Staying just within the law could also border on being unethical. In other words, a person could be found to have met legal technical requirements but their behavior might be considered unacceptable from an ethical viewpoint.

5. Imagine that you are working for an organization that produces a highly controlled and experimental drug that is targeted for the treatment of a rare virus. Unfortunately, someone close to you has contracted the disease, and it appears that the only hope this person has is to obtain the experimental drug. At this time, however, there is absolutely no way you could obtain the drug under legal means. Using each of the three classifications of ethical theories (consequential, rule-based, and cultural), briefly describe what you would do.

ANS:

Consequential - Under this perspective you could argue that the greatest good will be served (saving your friend), and you may rationalize stealing the drug to save the life. Here, good consequences do not always follow from right actions. Rule-based theory - Under this perspective the character of the act would not allow you to steal the drug. The character of the act, not the effect, is the driving force. Under Kant's categorical imperative, it is simply wrong to steal, a necessary universal standard. The self-interest of human beings is God's providence, or there are rule-based guides to moral behavior. Cultural relativism - Here, you would do what is right given the context. If a more consequential base was the norm, then you would likely take the drug.
